Journal mys:

It has been unofficially announced that Mr. Horsoe Greeley has censed to control, or even to conduct the New York Tribuse. It is said the facts will be afficially announced in a few days. The causes that have led to this action are only guessed at. I am of opinion that he has been crowded out by outside luthences. He originally owned the entire property of the Tribune, but in an evil bour transformed it into a joint stock company. He retained, however, the control of the paper, by contract, but what does a contract amount to when one of the contracting parties enters it for the sole purpose of accomplishing its ultimate vacation.

Mr. Horace Greeley, more than a year and a half ago, announced his intention of retiring from the press after the them pending canvass for the Presidency was concluded. No doubt he honestly intended making good his promises; but the life of an editor has so many charms and delights miscled with its carry and very tions. delights mingled with its cares and vexations, that he probably found it next to suicide to earry his designs into execution.

An old horse, though well worn out in a back mill, if let loose and placed in a field of clover, will, after a few rounds, return to his shaft, and any ously manifest a desire to return to his toll and drudgery. It is so with an old editor when released from his harness. Thurlow Weed, though rich beyond any ressonable man's desires, and well stricken in years into the bargain, finds it impossible to exist if deprived of the a mosphere of a printing office. Old Major Noah, though he possessed great anxiety to be released from the toils of an editor, could not die easily and quietly till he had a last look at a composing room, and an editor's table.
